

ABSTRACT

A baseball bat having a lightweight core comprised of an elongated handle portion and a striking portion, wherein the handle portion and/or the striking portion is/are over wrapped with a singular thin external polymer composite skin bonded with resin directly and rigidly to the core forming a structural sandwich resulting in reduced weight, improved strength, stiffness and durability, thereby providing increased bat speed and improved hitting distances.